Abstract

Taylor Pensoneau, Illinois Statecraft, ISG-A-L-2009-007

Biographical Information Overview of Interview: Taylor Pensoneau was born on October 20th, 1940 in Belleville, Illinois. He decided early on to go into journalism, earning his college degree from the University of Missouri-Columbia in 1962. Pensoneau covered the Illinois Statehouse beat for the St. Louis Post Dispatch from Oct. 1965 through Jan. 1978, covering the Richard Ogilvie, Dan Walker, and Jim Thompson gubernatorial administrations. In 1978 he became a lobbyist for the Illinois Coal Association, and spent 26 years with that organization during a time of stress for the state's coal industry.

While at the Coal Association, Taylor began a third career, writing books on Illinois' political and criminal history. His first foray as a book author was Dan Walker, The Glory and the Tragedy. He has since written books on Governor Richard Ogilvie and former Illinois State Senator W. Russell Arrington, the most powerful Illinois legislator of the 1960s. More recently, he turned his focus to notorious southern Illinois criminals. He also wrote the chapters on George Ryan and Rod Blagojevich for the book on Illinois governors, Mostly Good and Competent Men.

During the course of several interviews, Pensoneau shared his views on gubernatorial administrations from Otto Kerner to Rod Blagojevich, as well as most of the significant political developments of the last forty years.
